The World's Wheat Crop and Our Foreign Markets

The United States Has a Greater Percentage of Production Than Any Other Nation

UCH has been said of the posalbility of Russia capturing the wheat market of Europe and the east, to the detriment of the countries of North and South America. when Siberia had become more fully developed and the wheat area of that immense country could be poured upon European and far eastern mar-

When these predictions were first made Russia, including Poland, North Caucasus, Finland, Siberia, Central Asia and trans-Caucasia, was producng more wheat than the United States. At that time it seemed as though the limit of our wheat production had been practically reached. It was about 1893 when the statements of Russia's ability to capture the wheat markets abroad were attracting the greatest attention, and at that time Russia was producing a greater quantity of wheat than was grown in the United States. In fact until as late as 1894 Russia was producing the greatest amount of wheat of the wo nations, and a greater amount than that produced by any other nation. But since that time the two nations have exchanged places, and the United States has now stepped to first place among the wheat-producing nations of the world with an ever-widening difference between the amount of wheat grown here and in all of Russia. In 1893 there was grown in all of Russia and her dependencies a total of 538,018,000 bushels of wheat, and during the same year there was grown in the United States 396,132,000 oushels. The following year, 1894, while the United States increased its

SHELLS NOT EFFECTIVE.

Long Range Rifles Do Much More Damage Than Heavy Artillery.

Lyddite, we are told, was to carry sil before it. The concussion of the sir caused by the bursting of a lyddite shell would kill 40 or 50 men. I never believed this, says a writer in London Truth, as, if it had been true, evidently somebody ought to be hanged for Africa. So, too, in regard to the heaps of dead in the Boer trenches, I am told that these trenches are held by men placed at so great a distance from each other that no shell can kill more than two. As soon as a man is killed another comes from some safe shelter and takes his place. If this be so, it will account for the bayonet charge being generally successful, for the Boers cannot be said to be poltroons, and I never could make out why, if they were ready to stand and be shot, they fled at the sight of bayonets.

Letters from officers say that neither our shells nor those of the Boers do so much mischief as was anticipated, and that the best defense of an intrenched position is not cannon, but rifles. A generally has about 150 cartridges. If the necessity arises he can fire away the whole lot in a few minutes, but he can always be trusted to remain sufficiently cool not to throw them away, and to calmly wait until his opponents come within about 50 yards of the trench which is to be carried. If he perceives that it will be carried, he falls back on a second trench, and fires from there. There is no fuss or bravado about him. His idea is to hold an intrenched position with as little risk to his own skin as possi ble. This may not be a very chivalrous mode of warfare, but it is a terribly
